Legal Aid

Many family law services, including divorce, financial relief and disputes regarding arrangements for children, no longer fall within the scope of legal aid. However, there are areas where legal aid remains available.

Applications for legal aid funding still remain for the following areas of family law:

- ✓ Care and supervision proceedings involving Social Services. A parent in such proceedings is automatically and immediately entitled to legal aid irrespective of their financial means.
 - ✓ Matters where you have been a victim of domestic abuse.
 - ✓ Other 'exceptional' cases.
 - ✓ Mediation and advice following mediation.
 - ✓ Private disputes between parents regarding arrangements for children if there is evidence that the other person has been assessed as presenting a risk to children.

It is important to remember for matters, excluding care and supervision proceedings, it is still necessary to qualify financially and evidence would need to be produced as to both income and capital assets as part of the legal aid assessment process.

Our family law experts will guide you through your options and advise on whether your circumstances satisfy the requirements to qualify for public funding.

Guiding You on Your Legal Journey

From offering initial advice on the prospects of your case to providing leading representation, our team is here for you.
